Of course, every man has formed some mental picture of what he considers the ideal wife. Dr. and Mrs. Satterwhite Honored by Ambassador and Mme. Mathieu.

By EVELYN C. HUNT.

The Ambassador of Chile and beauty of mind and soul, or beauty of body in a woman.

My dear, when a man gets married he shuts his eyes tight and thrusts his arm into the matrimonial grab mag and pulls out whatever piece of calico he chances to get his hand on. He goes it blind. He doesn't look for any particular quality in a woman when he takes her for a wife. He has no definite ideal to which she must measure up.

He doesn't even stop to find out whether the women he is tying up with for life is the kind of woman he really likes or not until he gets her home, and then most generally finds out that she isn't what he wanted.

It is both funny and pathetic that when a man comes to take the most important step in his life, the step that most profoundly affects his happiness and well-being, he brings no intelligence to bear upon it. He ceases to be a reason-with the state of the most important to the most important of the princess Cantacusene, Capt. and Mrs. Gibson Fahnestock and Snowden Andrews.

My dear, when a man gets married last evening in compliment to Dr. last evening in compliment to Dr. and Mrs. Preston Pope Satterwhite and Mrs. Preston Pope Satterwhite and Mrs. Preston Pope Satterwhite and Mrs. Preston Pope Satterwhite.

It is hoth funny and pathetic that when a man comes to take the step that most profoundly affects his happiness and well-being, he brings no intelligence to bear and Mrs. Bradley had some Mme. Mathieu entertained at dinner

But when a man goes to marry, he forgets all about the qualities that he needs in a wife. The poor man marries a girl who is a waster and a spender and a sp so soon fall out of love, and become tired of their wives.

The answer is that they haven't got what they really wanted in a wife. They have been betrayed by a passing fancy into taking something that caught their eyes for a moment, but of which they soon wearied. They have been tricked into buying something that doesn't meet their needs and that they really don't desire, and so it is not strange that they are dissatisfied.

In making no other choice in life does a man's brain cease functioning as it does in matrimony. If a man went forth to buy an automobile, and came home with a baby carriage instead of it; if, when he needed a new engine and boiler in his factory, he invested his money in pink chiffen, he would rush to take what she can the pink chiffen, he would rush to the nearest alienist to have its sone arranged in the business of the men. They have the say, they do the pairing. A woman has his choice, and his wife represents his pick.

But Conference Ladies 'Put Nothing Over' on American Women.

Among the prominent people who have already taken boges for the dance, are: The Secretary of the Treasury, Andrew Mellon, Mrs. Robt. Woods Bliss, Madame Hauge, Mrs. James W. Wadsworth, jr., Mrs. Morris Lecke, Mrs. Jehn A. Johnston, Mrs. Eugene Mayer, Mrs. Hugene Historians say that the fashions of the common people are set by the plenipotentiaries of both sexes. If that law were applied to the present arms conference, the everyday arms conference, the everyday woman would certainly be at a loss as regards "what to wear."

If the conference ladies—Mme. Viviani, Mme. Koo, Mme. de With and Lady Lee—brought with them any novel ideas of style, the American ladies never knew it. And, conversely, if the American modistes had anything new to offer in the way of trotteurs or paniers or crepe de chines, the conference iadies never knew it. This was ascertained after canvassing Washington's modistes. Miss Charlie Griggs, who is at-tending school in Virginia, is home for the Christmas holidays. er, of Milkaukee, are guests at the home of Maj. and Mrs. Charles H. McDonald. Never has the British influence predominated in the drapery of the feminine form. All-out-of-doors is the ruling passion of the English woman, and the gorgeous refinements of dress seem to occupy a secondary, position in her life.

Mrs. Towner has resumed her days at home and will receive the sec-ond and fourth Tuesdays each month throughout the season.

Not so the French woman. From the incongruous squareness of her short-vamped slippers to the riotous color of her tea-time turban (and all the lures of abbreviated dress, thin silk stockings, rouge and cu-riously scented powder), she reflects a vitality of interest in clothes.
